The Guild News

www.astrologyguild.com

November 12, 2009 7:30 - 9:30 pm Charlotte Greenwood on History of Astrology

Charlotte is passionate about astrology and has been casting astrological charts since she was 16. During the past 15 years she has integrated astrology into her psychic practice. In 2006 she completed the Foundation Level with the Faculty of Astrological Studies, London. She also holds a Level III Certificate from the Canadian Association for Astrological Education. She is an active member of the Fraser Valley Astrological Guild.

The History of Astrology is one which is woven firmly into the fabric of every major culture of the past 4 millennia. It is a significant contributor to the sciences and philosophies we recognize today. It has been flexible enough to speak to every age, and yet possesses the integrity to remain constant to its foundation – namely, that each individual is rooted in his/her own unique relationship to the cosmos, and that Astrology is a living, breathing, symbolic language which places us in this context.
Come hear its Stories.

Presidents Message: November 2009

Thank you to all who attended the AGM this month. It was a good turnout and members voted on several of the executives new proposals as well as voting the existing executive back in for another year; our thanks to our members for your confidence. We will do our best to create an interesting and informative year for everyone. Our special thanks also to Lidia Apanowicz, Linda Grey and Jullin Taylor who have so generously offered to volunteer their time to help us.

Here are some of the changes that were voted in :

- Pro-rating would be allowed for new members joining. An exception would be made for those have not been involved with the Guild for 3 or more years.
- New members joining the Guild in May or June will be charged the pro-rated membership dues for the current year. .
- It was proposed a new category for 'members at large' be created which are for those who live beyond the Fraser Valley or Lower Mainland… not close enough to attend our meetings, but would like to stay in touch via a newsletter. An example is our members who live in the Okanagan, or the Islands. A suggested fee of $25 will be charged which would include the newsletter and attendance of a maximum of 2 meetings annually
- The drop in fee for non-members will be raised from $8 to $10 to attend a meeting.
- Workshop fees will increase from $130 to $150 for non-members. Early bird discounts will not be offered to non-members
- Early-bird workshop fees for members are increased by $10, for each category, seniors and regulars. Such a great deal when you think other astrology groups are charging so much more. Early bird rates would be offered 90 days prior to a workshop and available to members whose membership is in good standing.
- Library fees have also changed. We rent books for a $10 deposit + $1 a month = $11 to members in good standing only.
- We have purchased new White board and an Epson projector screen, making our presentations easier for you to see and enjoy. We are still interested in obtaining a projector but have put that on hold at this time, however, if anyone out there finds an amazing deal, please let us know.

Many thanks also to Anne Massey who gave a very interesting and informative talk on Hellenistic Astrology. We learned how to go deeper into the chart and analyze which planets have the most clout! We hope we'll hear more on that topic in the future. And Anne, many thanks for donating so many great books to the library.

Now for the astrology synopsis. The heavens are changing and this fall has given us two new cycles that have the potential to change some things in our lives. After a two and one half year sojourn in Virgo (issues of responsibility, health, self doubt), Saturn finally moves into Libra on the 30th of October. Those people who have a prominent Virgo can feel the relief from the exacting gaze of the 'task master'. However, when it comes to Saturn, there is always more. Saturn (the rule-maker is exalted in Libra (relationships, balance, impartiality) and the focus now falls on each and every relationship we have – to people, places and things, even to our relationship with our own self – to countries and nations. This could be a time for building relationships and for tearing down relationships. Whatever, it is we will get real and get it right…….or not. Saturn will be hanging out in Libra until Oct 2012 so there is lots of time for us to get our priorities in order to accomplish this transit.

Mars also moved into Leo on the 17th of October and retrogrades on Dec 20th until March 10th then continues on through Leo until June 8th. The combination of Mars the master of action, the warrior and Leo the Actor, the creative, the King will produce a variety of situations in those lives where Leo is prominent. Under stress Mars in Leo can lean toward over-reacting and ego escalation using bravado to bluff through the situation or taking things too personally and being offended. Mars is retrograde throughout the Olympics. With stress on line anyway at the games, in the city, in traffic etc. won't it be interesting to be able to observe the antics that we will all play out during this extraordinary time in Vancouver.

We have Charlotte Greenwood speaking on the history of Astrology at our November 12th meeting. This is a vast subject and gives us a body of knowledge whereby we can appreciate where we came from, and how far we have come. As with anything we study, to know the history of a subject is the foundation we build on. A must attend for anyone interested in astrology. We hope to see you there.

Chapter 8, The Archetype of Capricorn, by Evolutionary Astrologer, Rose Marcus

Modified Excerpt:
Libra/Capricorn, Saturn in Libra:

The sign of the balancing scales, it is through the Libra archetype that we seek to reconcile with our observation of self in an externalized or projected context, and by extension, that we begin to form a sense of socialized value and meaning. The contrast supplied by our outer (Libra) experiential (Aries) realities (Capricorn), prompts the forging of relationships, relatedness, and relativity. Interaction with our external circumstances and environments will begin to fashion the breeding ground for the next stage of evolution. In response to external stimuli, we begin to build a framework. In other words, we formulate a sense of context based on our evaluations of experience.

Libra's initiating impulse or drive is compelled to seek unity rather than singularity, and to combine or join together rather than to create separation. To some extent, Capricorn's drive to establish consensus and to regulate the workings of the whole is in harmony with Libra's basic drives, and it is for this reason that Saturn in Libra is considered exalted. Saturnine propensities can function well through Libra's refining archetype. Still, it is the foundation or root cause behind the momentum of intentions, evaluated needs, and goals that are critically defining at this ninety-degree crisis angle.
Values shaped by exposure to past experience are the compass point that will decide the flow for the evolving present. Libra's evaluations lead to the forming of judgments (Capricorn) that will dictate how we moderate and regulate when we interface with larger wholes, or in other words, that which exists outside of self. In contrast to the spontaneous approach of the Aries pioneering initiative, Libra's reconciliation initiative is directed by pre-consideration (of options or of competing needs), whether consciously realized or not.

The angle of Libra in square to Capricorn's zenith point correlates to the progressive socialization of consciousness. Here, consciousness seeks to correct imbalance or extremity, and to establish a new level of equilibrium and uniformity. The objectives defined at this ninety-degree "crisis" (deciding) angle will shape what comes next. At this stage of evolution, consciousness will begin to formulate a system by which to observe, measure, and form opinions of its experiential reality. This progressively shaped law of averages will be used to establish, maintain, and regulate (Capricorn) the equilibrium (Libra).

The orientation of the ninety-degree square aspect between the air sign of Libra (mental planes) and earth sign of Capricorn (manifest planes) is one of crisis in consciousness, (of internalized, philosophical, moral energy), rather than crisis in action, (externalized, projected, manifested energy). The momentum now builds toward, cohesion, united fronts, integration, regulation, and containment, rather than separateness, independence, and individuation.

The Libra/Capricorn refinement angle seeks to corral, streamline, and reconcile the diverse and multi-faceted expressions into an organized whole. Here we find an accelerated drive toward a bettered and more regulated equilibrium. At this angle, clashing contrasts and polarizations reach their maximum. The industry of the cardinal angle is directed toward the leveling of extremes in order to create greater effectiveness and control, and toward the prized objective of a reconciled balance point. (Note that viewpoints and opinions on the balance point between subject and object can differ, sometimes greatly so.)

The regulating of standards and status quos leads to the progressive shaping of the cultural social unit and consensus based opinions (Libra/Capricorn). These consensus markers constitute the security lynchpins from which all other judgment tracks will be laid. At this cardinal apex point, society's evaluations (Libra) will begin (cardinal) to form the standards of the judicial systems (Capricorn) of contemporary civil and social laws. That which becomes labeled as necessary will form the parameters, dividing lines, and base shape of what is built next.

In its positive application, Libra regulated through Capricorn results in the construction of a supportive equilibrium. Balanced judgment leads to governing within appropriate boundaries and secure structures or frames of reference (psychological, emotional, material, and conceptual) that take into consideration the diverse needs of the one as a reflection of the many. When harnessed in its purest, most natural expression, we see the results of mature and wise judgment, responsible self-regulation, self-consistency, self-discipline, gracious authority, and achievements of recognizable worth.

When filtered through the emotions of fear and anxiety, the building momentum reflects in imbalances of judgment that typically ignite a battle for control (the one-sidedness of relating). This filtering typically resorts to forceful, restrictive, or constrictive means in order to achieve singular or self-serving objectives. Justifications and rationalizations that are based in a singular or subjective orientation rather than plural or cooperative orientation result in hierarchical evaluations and relationships. Dominance, submission, withholdings, entrapments, despotism, etc. are common denominators of this mindset.

When a corrupt bid for control reigns supreme, we see social and political management that typically serves the one or few rather than the many. Rather than achieve the desired goal of comprehensive integration, we see oppressive (and tenuous) social or political control, further segregation, disintegration, and abuse of the system. When operating at this distorted level, the consensus is forced to bent knees (conformity) by dictates of restrictive regimentation, laws, and regulations. Authority then uses the system and its rules to its convenience, and fair play turns foul to self-serving. When opportunistic authority is at the control panel, social inequality, racism, and bigotry become the norm of everyday lives. Social injustice is found sanctioned and perpetuated through political policy and government enforcement.

At various levels, the politics of Libra square Capricorn will display the conflict between the people and authority's dictates. The government rules over the people rather than with or for the people. Libra square Capricorn can see the devaluing and disposability of the individual, and the shrinking of their social rights. Advocating an attitude of "the cause is more important than the foot soldier", the needs of the one can be sacrificed for a rationalized private, political, or social goal. When this is the case, Libra square Capricorn can set in play "means justifies the end" strategies that marginalize social groups, that reduce individuals into faceless names and numbers, and that create rationalizations and justifications that allow for the crossing of inappropriate boundaries. Infiltrations into private systems, invasive tracking, and surveillance of personal lives can leave no stone unturned.

When Capricorn dominates Libra, the border between cooperation and conformity is erased. Social convention, rather than uniqueness or individuality, is both lauded and enforced. Individualized rights, free enterprise, and true capitalism lose their previous solid ground. Social, political, and ideological inequalities, along with racial and national tensions can stew. That which has been suppressed can be unleashed with great destructive force. When resort to increasingly forceful means reaches extremity, war is more common than peace.

Saturn in Libra (Sign of Exaltation):
Saturn tenants Libra from October 29, 2009 through October 5, 2012. (Note: Saturn dips back into Virgo from April 7, 2010 through July 21, 2010.) Saturn in Libra draws attention to toward the normalizing and legitimizing of a conceptual frame of reference. Saturn's transit through Libra prompts a refinement process that qualifies who and what is acceptable, and that defines rules or regulations regarding what methods or what means need be employed in order to enforce an "upgraded" or better-controlled status quo. Will there be greater tolerance, or more judgment, hypocrisy, and double standards? The scales can tip to either side and they can swing to the extreme too. The Saturn in Libra years can see the government put more burdens on the shoulders of the people. Note the government of British Columbia will implement the new Harmonized Sales Tax (how befitting for Saturn in Libra!) in July of 2010.

In terms of both public and private life journeys, compromises and compensations based on the distortions of Saturn in Libra's insecure rationalizations are where problems will first manifest. While a bettered balance is the ambition of Saturn's transit in Libra, it is a time to adjust the review mirror of our preconceptions in order to turn the corner more successfully. The Saturn in Libra years will reveal the ineffectiveness of previous half-way measures and misplaced ambitions. Progressively, down-the-drain efforts will become too obvious to ignore. The middle path may be the correct target, but marginal choices will not yield sufficiently to satiate our contemporary and evolving needs.

Saturn's transit in Libra will draw a more definitive line in the sand regarding our social and material needs. Out of necessity, we will come to define our boundaries, our bottom lines, and ourselves more clearly. As the process unfolds we will learn what and who provides real value and meaning, and what or who are worthy expenditures for our time and efforts too. Fear of moving forward or attachment to outcome implies a short-sightedness that can set the stage for later downfall and loss.

Conscientious ambition is the first paving stone for the building of realistic and responsible goal setting. Personal honesty, integrity, acceptance of responsibility, and conscientious participation constitutes the appropriate cement mix for successful one-on-one relating and for the sculpting of outer world purpose, achievement, and fulfillment. Saturn's transit in Libra is not a time to just "get by", to expect a handout, or to wait for someone else to take charge. We cannot scrimp on effort or investment if we desire to reap a reward of lasting value. Undivided attention to the tasks at hand and full presence to the here and now is required in order to master inner and outer equilibrium. These are the essential tools that will lead to the achievement of personal excellence, relationship fulfillment, purposeful social contribution, and best of all, a life worth living.

How did I become interested in Astrology?

It was during the tender yet tumultuous years of adolescence that the notion of astrology first crept into my awareness. After disappointing experiences in religious education classes, unsatisfactory answers from adults, teachers and other authority-bearing individuals, the lecture of popular astrology snippets (arguably of disputable academic or esoteric value) finally hinted at the possibility that there may be ways and means to explain the mysteries of the universe, after all.

During secondary school, when it was time to decide what one wanted to do with one's life, my mother, who by then had nearly despaired of my inability to find a professional orientation (Pisces MC…), had my astrological chart done. No doubt she was hoping to shed some light on the behaviour of her rebellious teenage daughter, who was so different from her (she all Air, me all Water), and figure out what profession I could possibly go into. The chart was done in the popular Swiss Huber style with the strongly coloured signs in the outer wheel. When I fist laid eyes on this strange yet familiar looking A4 page with my chart wheel on it, I felt hypnotised by it. I would return to the page again and again and stare at it for ages, as if somehow by gazing at it intensely I could penetrate the meaning of those wondrous glyphs and symbols.

This familiarity and fascination may be accounted for in various different ways; however, the explanation that makes most sense to me pertains to the concept of reincarnation and the idea that we find many things along our current life-path that are bound up with experiences and memories from past lives. The Bulgarian philosopher Omraam Mikhael Aivanhovi explains this with the following example about spirituality:

"Only those that give priority to the spirit, to the light, can truly evolve. But obviously you must first experience the need of it, and this need cannot be manufactured: you come to the world either with it or without, depending on the life that you led in other incarnations. If someone comes to earth with a need for spirituality, it will take very little, just a book or a few words, to start a momentum that nothing will be able to stop. Whereas, for someone else, even if the whole world is preaching to them, it won't do any good, because their tendencies lead them in another direction."

Similarly, perhaps we are drawn to subject matters, motifs, and symbols that we have already worked on in previous lifetimes; hence very little is needed to activate the "recognition" and rekindle an interest and passion for a subject.

So, at age 17 I started my apprenticeship in horticulture (not that this choice was supported by my chart save for the North Node in Taurus). Among my green-fingered co-workers were two women who attended weekly astrology classes. Due to my precocious maturity (which I was later able to identify as being a "Saturnian"), I was admitted into this curious circle of people who gushed over topics like: "wow, she's got Jupiter on the Ascendant!" or, "oh she's a double Cancer, so sensitive..." Not that it meant much to me at the time; but I was flattered to be the subject of their astrological study on the one hand, and fascinated to listen to my friends' discussions after their classes on the other. Everything sounded intriguing and made, in a strange and instinctive/intuitive way, total sense to me.

Despite my natural interest in and appreciation for astrology, I didn't pick up a textbook until my late twenties (Saturn return in the Piscean 10th). By then I had left my native Switzerland and was living in Canada, participating and sharing in the life of a spiritual community in the East Kootenays. My horticultural experience was handy during the developing phase of the community, but after some five, six years, I started to grow tired of working so much physically. Realising that I hadn't ever done much to develop my mind, I became increasingly hungry for learning new things. For a time there were weekly study groups in the community; we learned about various esoteric subjects, including Tarot and Astrology. For me this was the first glimpse of a possible occupation other than growing plants and weeding gardens. With the influx of the new millennium, and the cessation of our astrology classes in the community, it was gradually emerging (Pisces MC doesn't decide, it let's things "emerge"…) that I would go ahead and study astrology. Really, actually, and officially study it!

After researching my options I enrolled with the Faculty of Astrological Studiesii for their Foundation Correspondence Course. Although this is a British school, my personal tutor was a Canadian Virgo from Nova Scotia who guided me skillfully through one year of delightful astrological distance learning. Then in May 2001, I assisted at for the first time at an astrological conference; driving to Norwac in Seattle with two astrologically minded friends from the community. I found the buzz of the conference exhilarating and was amazed at all the different approaches to one, albeit massive, subject – all under one roof!

During my correspondence course I learned about the Faculty's summer school held every year in prestigious Oxford, UK; and the thought of gathering and exchanging with other astrology students and assisting in "live" classes for a whole week got me quite excited. Come August 2001, I arrived in England and was relishing every minute of summer school held at the prestigious Brasenose College, Oxford.

Many great names were assembled on those venerable and historical grounds, and I was delighted to bathe in the atmosphere of teaching and learning, of exchange and new encounters. I uncovered a side within myself that had been buried under frustration and rebellion stemming from the years of "official" schooling – now, I genuinely enjoyed learning, in fact, I just couldn't get enough of it!

It was during a talk given by Darby Costello that the idea of possibly relocating to the UK first took hold in my mind. She was talking about the CPA (the Centre for Psychological Astrology) where she is one of the main tutors and supervisors. After approaching her at the end of the lecture, I walked away with the CPA phone number, a warm feeling of encouragement, and a mind that was gently pushed towards greater openness and vaster possibilities. During this visit in the UK I also attended the conference of the British Astrological Association, another long-standing organization involved with astrological learning. This conference took place around a weekend of early September, and I was scheduled to fly back to Canada just a few days later. But then, events took a strange turn.

While I stayed with a friend in London until my departure, the unthinkable happened on the 11th of that month when the (literally) highest symbols of the Western commercial world were attacked and crumbled into a heap of dust. This meant that all transatlantic flights were cancelled until further notice. A newly formed acquaintance from the Oxford summer school contacted me and said in a somewhat triumphant voice: 'Well, now that you are stuck here, you might as well come to the CPA seminar on Sunday!' Naturally, I did go the following Sunday. On my way there I felt a breeze in my neck, not just the gentle autumn wind that blew through London at this time of year, but the meaningful breeze of destiny. I knew it was a significant day that would determine all my future choices. I loved my day participating at the CPA seminar, and the rest, as they say, is history…

A few months later in January 2002, on my third Jupiter return, I relocated to England and the whole astrological adventure started for real: CPA seminars every Sunday, lectures at the Astrological Lodge on Mondays, weekly classes with the LSA (London School of Astrology) on Wednesdays, the annual AA conference (that's the Astrological Association, to be clear!) every September – and anything else astrologically relevant that I could get to within reasonable distance. Now, seven years, an LSA certificate, a CPA diploma, a degree course in psychotherapy later, I am finally returned to Canada. And the best part of it is, as I am sure many of us aficionados know, that the journey has still only just begun and that it is never ending! I look forward to making new astrological friends in the Vancouver area.
